PREFACE.

THIS edition of my HINDŪSTĀNĪ DICTIONARY is printed entirely in the Roman character; and the words are arranged according to the English alphabet. The end and object in view has been to render the work more portable and less expensive than hitherto. It is compiled verbatim from my last edition (1858), the only difference being the omission of the Persian and Devanāgarī characters and the consequent re-arrangement of the words. At the same time, several new words and phrases have been added; and it is not too much for me to say that this is by far the most copious Dictionary, in both its parts, of the Hindūstānī language that has yet appeared.

Every Hindūstānī word, from the beginning to the end of the work, may be unerringly transposed into the Oriental characters in accordance with the system laid down in the last editions of my Grammar and Manual of the language. It is needless for me to remark that the work is not intended to supersede the Oriental character, a knowledge of which must be ultimately attained by all those who mean to distinguish themselves in Her Majesty's Indian Service.

It remains for me now to point out a few obvious particulars which present themselves in the course of the work.

1. In Part First, compound words are generally to be found under the first or leading member of the compound; at the same time, it is proper to observe that the Hindūstānī language is capable of admitting or forming thousands of compounds not to be found in any dictionary: hence, the learner should bear in mind the more general rules for the formation of compound words as laid down in any good grammar of the language. The same remark applies with regard to the rūles for derivation, particularly those relating to the formation of causal verbs and abstract nouns.

2. The few contractions used throughout the work are the following: The letters a, p, s; as well as h, d, t, or g, at the end of the definitions, denote that the word there defined is from the Arabic, Persian, Sanskrit, respectively; the letter h distinguishes such words as are aboriginal or purely Indian; and d such as are peculiar to the Deccan (dakhan): the few words marked t and g are of Tartarian and Greek origin respectively. The other contractions are, m. denoting the masculine gender; f. feminine; a. an active or transitive verb; and n. a verb neuter. The letter v. imports vide, and pl. the plural number.

3. In Part Second, and occasionally in Part First, the following contractions are used in the formation of compound verbs: k, for karnā (or the Persian kardan), "to make;" h, for honā, "to be, to become;" j, for jānā, "to go, to be;" r, for rakhnā, "to keep, to have;" d, for denā, "to give;" l, for lenā, "to take;" ḍ, for ḍālnā, "to throw;" and b, for bāndhnā, "to bind." These, with the exception of the first two, are chiefly used in the formation of intensives, and consequently they have then laid aside their own primitive signification. As a general rule, compound words have their parts or members separated by a hyphen, thus dil-nishīn, tan-durust, sar-gardān, &c. Such compounds, when transferred into the Oriental characters, are optionally written entire as one word, or distinct as two. The short i, denoting the Persian iẓāfat, is indifferently written either as the last letter of the governing word, or separately between the two words, as dardi sar or dard i sar, the sense being abundantly obvious either way, as no Persian word ends in the short i except it be in a state of construction with the substantive or adjective following.

4. I have avoided cross references, which are very embarrassing to the learner; and I never have recourse to this slovenly plan except when the word referred to is either close at hand or is attended by a long explanation which it would be needless to repeat.

In conclusion, I have only to add, that amidst such a mass of small letters, it will not seem surprising that an occasional error of the press should have occurred. I trust, however, that the number of such errors is small; and I am confident that the generous, the learned, and the experienced (and it is their good opinion, and theirs only, I am ambitious to obtain) will not deny me their kind indulgence.

A DICTIONARY,

HINDŪSTĀNĪ AND ENGLISH.

a, a short vowel, pronounced as u in up. In composition it gives the word it precedes a privative, negative, or diminutive meaning: an is substituted for it when it precedes a vowel. In Hindī words at the end, it may be used to form the diminutive of a noun, or adjectives from substantives.

ā, a long vowel, pronounced as a in father: (imper. sing. of ānā), come.

ab, now, presently, just now, a little while ago; by adding kā, ke, kī, it forms an adjective, as ab-kā zamāna, the present time. h.

ab (contract. from abu), a father. In Hindūstānī, the plural is of most frequent occurrence, as in ābā o ajdād, fathers and grandfathers, ancestors. a.

āb, m. water, splendour, elegance, dignity, lustre (in gems), temper (of steel, &c.), edge, sharpness (of a sword, &c.). The word āb in Persian is used in a great many metaphoric and idiomatic expressions. p.

'ain, called 'aini muhmala or 'aini ghair mankūṭa, the eighteenth letter of the Arabic alphabet, the twenty-first Persian, and twenty-fourth Hindūstānī. This letter is peculiarly Arabic or Semitic, and has no analogous sound in Sanskrit. It is of the class of guttural letters, being formed in the lower part of the throat, by a compression of the fauces stronger and deeper than that used in the formation of the hamza, or initial alif. Its sound has been compared by Meninski to the voice of a calf calling its mother, which is a pure absurdity. In reckoning by abjad it stands for 70. In Persian words introduced into Arabic it is sometimes substituted for alif, as la'l for lāl. On the other hand the 'ain of Arabic words introduced into Hindūstānī is, by the common people, sounded like alif.

lāl bujhakkar, an intelligent person; one who comprehends quickly, or who readily divines what has happened or is to happen from certain symptoms. As a proper name or epithet it is generally used ironically for a wiseacre, an ignorant fool who pretends to more sense than his neighbours: as in the following answer given by a person of this description, when consulted respecting the marks of an elephant's feet in mire, by people who had never seen such an animal: yih to būjhe Lāl-Bujhakkar aur na būjhe ho,e; pāyan chakkī bāndhkar mat harnā kūdā ho,e, "Surely Lāl-Bujhakkar and none else can understand this: may not an antelope with a millstone tied to his feet have bounded here?" This gentleman is evidently of the same family with the Wise Men of Gotham. Some twenty or thirty years ago there was a very popular little book current in Scotland, attributed to the pen of the celebrated Adam Smith, entitled "The History of Wise Willie and Witty Eppy." Wise Willie is undoubtedly the full brother of Lāl Bujhakkar, for once upon a time the folk of Fife brought him a horseshoe which they had picked up, and he sagely assured them that it was the new moon, only it puzzled him sorely to account for its having fallen in Fife, as he had seen it the night before far to the south-west over a very remote part of the country. h.s.
